Chris specializes in audio-visual production earned through more than 25 years as a videographer and photographer for the Canadian military. He has produced news stories and documentaries, has led field crews around the world to cover conflict, humanitarian efforts and exercises, and was appointed as the official photographer for the Governor General of Canada (1996-1999).

Before the military, Chris worked as a photographer for Le Courrier de Malartic and as a crime-scene photographer for the local police. After the military, he signed on as a producer and director for Army News which included the two-season, YouTube reality series called Basic Up!

Today, Chris heads up all a/v production projects at Cliff Hanger Communications while leading DSLR audio-visual instruction at a military public affairs training facility.

He is also a wine enthusiast who produces blog posts for his personal channels and does so using mobile journalism (MoJo) technologies to produce and publish content on location.

Chris is a calm, confident, professional with extensive experience in leading productions. He is a valuable and versatile resource for organizations looking to promote their brand visually.
